

Accordion Story | ART 160: Introduction to Art | Spring 2018

This project uses pen and acrylic paint to tell the story of a warrior torn between love and duty. The story begins with her mother and aunt reminding her of the responsibility she is expected to uphold. She later finds her love on a mountain, where their hands meet and their contrasting colors blend to create a new color, symbolizing the love they create together. In the final panels, the warrior chooses to fight for that love. I incorporated pop-out elements and an accordion format that allows the story to unfold panel by panel, making the physical construction of the piece part of the storytelling.
